Juvenile Court Presents Scene of Regal Elegance

Tribunal, Once in Destitute Surroundings, Now Reigns in Dignity on Velvet-draped Throne in One of Washington's Mansions-Bare Pine Table Replaced with Mahogany Bench.

By MILDRED DILLON. The court of destitution has overnight become the court of regal ele-

Where once the juvenile judge of the District rapped his gavel at the giggling young delinquents in a squalld disabled five-room building, he now reigns austere in dignity on a velvetdraped throne in the south room of one of Washington's mansions.

For eight years the $30-a-month dilapidated building provided by the District for the judgment seat of its youngsters served but to try out the qualities of the newly launched Juvenile Court. Congress received pleas in various and variegated forms, and many of them, before it acknowl-edged that the Juvenile Court was one of the most practical institutions of country and consented to allow the District $300 a month for the rent of a suitable building. The large residence of Mrs. Ellen Kirby, at 208 I street northwest, was leased and the Juvenile Court bade good-by forever to the crumbling walls and the decayed floors of the old building on F street, near Eighteenth. From a warped, bare pine table, Judge J. Wilmer Latimer has trans-ferred his judgment seat to a novel be beaten even by the Supreme Court of the United States. The bench from which Judge Latimer will hand down juvenile de-cisions is a high massively-built ma-hogany one, equipped with domed lights. On the right of him is the balliff's chair and on the left the witness box. Directly in front of the bench and on a foot elevation is the ceiling forming a canopy festoon high above the back of the bench and down the walls to the floor.

Judge Latimer's achievement fitting out his new bench realizes an ambition Judge William H. De Lacey had for some time before he left the Juvenile Court.

The site of the Kirby residence is one made historic in the war of 1812. The house on the east was for many years the legation of the Apostolic See and in the same row stands the tee hought for President G which was afterward sold, and also arrangement that for luxury cannot | a former residence of Gen.
